^x N is written double or single in monosyllables; as, fenn or fen a fen, v. L. 40o.

N, from ne not, has a negative signification, not only in A.-S. but in other languages; as, Lat. ullus any one, nullus no one; Eng. one, none; ever, never; aught, naught; either, neither; A.-S. an one; nan no one: aht aught, any thing; naht naught, nothing; æfer, æfre ever; næfre never. If the words which prefix n begin with h or w, these letters are dropped; as, nabban [ne-habban] not to have, næs, [ne wæs] was not; but wi is changed into y; nylan [newillan] to be unwilling.

NA'; adv. [Plat. ne: Dut. neen: Ger. nein, näh, nee: South Ger. naa, nua: Moes. ne, ni: Dan. Swed. nej: Icel. nei: Pol. ni: Wel. na, nâd no, not:

Port. monja f. This word is old and was used by St. Hieronymus to designate a nun. Vossius thinks it is an Egyptian word, signifying a virgin; others derive it from the Grk. νουvis, νουva a nun; but being in earlier time a title of respect, given to old people, this derivation is not sufficient. Nonnones or nonnanes was in the Lat. mid. the name for old poor persons, provided for or maintained by the Church; Papias says, "nonnos vocamus majores ob reverentiam, nam intelligitur paterna reverentia;" and in the rule, or Institution of St. Benedict it is said, "Juniore autem Priores suos nonnos vocent, quod intelligitur paterna reverentia." In the same manner as old venerable monks, out of respect, were called Patres fathers, they also received the title Nonnos, and the old sacred virgins nonnas, and both together in the Latin of the middle age, were named nonnones and nonnanes. This word was often prefixed to proper names; as for instance, Nonnus Fridericus monachus. *punian to beat, knock] 1. A PENNY. The silver penny derived from the Roman denarius, was the standard coin in this country for more than a thousand years. Saxon money was sometimes reckoned by pennies, as the French money is now by livres. Mann. says, "the Saxon penny was equal to 3 pence of the present currency," but if a mancus (v. mancos) be 6 shillings or 72 pence in our money, and only 30 Saxon pennies, it follows that a Saxon penny was not quite 2½d. This was the greater penny, 5 of which made a shilling. There was also a smaller penny, about the value of our present penny, 12 of which made a shilling; denarius Anglo-Saxonicus, quorum singulus tres nostros valebat. 2. A shekel; siclus. 3. PUND, es; n. [Plat. Dan. Swed. Icel. Moes. pund n: Dut. pond n: Ger. pfund n: Not. phunt, pfunt: Ker. Pol. Hung. funt. In earlier times all silver and copper money was weighed, hence the appellation pound] 1. A pound weight; pondo, libra. 2. A POUND, a quantity of money; mina, v. mancos]. 3. A talent; talentum. The Saxon pound was used as an imaginary value of money, but there has been a variety of opinions about its value. We have proof, from Domesday, that in the time of the Confessor it consisted of twenty solidi or shillings. But Dr. Hickes, Dis. Ep. p. 111. contends that the Saxon pound consisted of sixty shillings, because, by the Saxon law in Mercia, the king's were-geld was one hundred and twenty pounds, and amounted to the same as six thegns, whose were was twelve hundred shillings each, L. Wilk. p. 72. And certainly this passage has the force of declaring that the king's were was seven thousand two hundred shillings, and that these were equivalent to one hundred and twenty pounds; and, according to this passage, the pound in Mercia contained sixty shillings. Other authors, as Camden, Spelman, and Fleetwood assert that the pound had but forty-eight shillings:—1. An pund deorwyrðre sealfe, Jn. 12, 3. Pund buteran gewihð LXXX pene-gum læsse þonne pund wætres, W. Cat. p. 179. 2. Þyn pund gestrynde tyn pund tua mina lucrificit decem minas, Lk. 19, 16. Nimað þæt pund fram hym, and syllað þam þe

As a v. a. requiring the auxiliary verb haben to have, to ride, to mount a horse. The Ger. reiten is originally the same word as reisen to travel, the s and t constantly interchanging in nearly all dialects. Its signification was formerly far more extensive than at present, and like reisen expressed generally any change of place without mentioning the manner of conveyance, which was expressed by the preposition auf on, in. Like the English and Dutch, the Ger. in earlier times used the expression, to ride in a coach, Ger. auf einem wagen reiten instead of the modern fahren vehere. Not. uses reita and gereite for carriage. SACU; g. d. ac. e; pl. nom. ac. a; g. ena; d. um; f. [Plat. sake f: Dut. zaak f: Frs. sek f: Ger. sache f: Sal. sack a lawsuit. In an old document of king Louis and Lothar of the ninth century, sachu signifies landed property: Isd. Tat. Ot. sahha, sachu, like the A.-S.: Ker. secho quarrels: Dan. sag c: Swed. sak f: Icel. sök f. court of justice, jurisdiction, a lawsuit. The derivation of this word has been a stumbling-block for nearly all etymologists. Adel. considers it as the intensive of the Ger. sage f. a saying, a talk, and sagen to say, signifying originally a clamour, dispute, quarrel; and, in a more extended sense, any kind of speech and its object. Synonyms in the Ger. and other languages confirm this derivation. The Ger. ding thing signifies, in its most extended sense, all that is existing; but, originally it designated altercation, cavilling, wrangling, as well as speech in general. The Lat. causa is derived from causari. Ger. klagen to complain, which, like the Ger. kören and kösen, in earlier times signified in general to speak. The It. cosa, and the Fr. chose, derived from causa, signify any matter or any thing. The Lat. res belongs to the root of the Ger. rede speech, recht right, rauschen to rush. Kero translates res by rachono, which antiquated word belonging to the Ger. rechen, reden is the root of Ger. rechnen to calculate. The Old Swed. sak, the Icel. sök f. signifies both crime and impeachment or punishment, and Tat. uses sahha to designate a SCEAT, sceatt, scæt, scætt, es; m. [Plat. Dut. schat m. treasure: Frs. skate f. the treasury; schaet f. tax, tribute: Ger. schatz m. what we preserve with a particular care, a treasure; in some provinces it signifies taxes, tribute: Mons. scaz movables; scaza substantia: Ot. scazz money: Tat. scazze money: Moes. skatt denarius: Dan. skat c. treasure, wealth, tribute: Swed. skatt m. a treasure, tax: Icel. skattr m. a tribute.—sceat a part, division] 1. Money, price, gain, tribute, treasure, gift; pecunia, thesaurus, lucrum, munus.

2. A definite quantity or piece of metal in an uncoined state, about the value of our penny.

In the time of Ethelbert, the scæt was the twentieth part of a shilling. His laws enjoin a penalty of twenty scyl-lingas for the loss of the thumb, and three scyllingas for the thumb-nail. It is afterwards declared that the loss of the great toe is to be compensated by ten scyllingas, and the other toes by half the price of the fingers. It is immediately added, that for the nail of the great toe thirty sceattas must be paid to bot, L. Ethelb. W. p. 6.—About three centuries later, the scæt appears somewhat raised in value, and to be like one of their smaller pennies; for the laws of Æthelstan declare XXX þusend sceatta, and þat bið ealles CXX punda thirty thousand scættas to be 120 pounds, L. Lund. W. p. 72, 10. This gives two hundred and fifty sceattas to a pound, or twelve and a half to a scylling. Perhaps, therefore, the sceat was the smaller penny, a little less than the value of the present English penny; and the pening, properly so called, was the larger one, the intrinsic worth of which was about 2½d., v. peneg. The sceat and scylling seem to have been the names of the Saxon money in Pagan times, before the Roman and French ecclesiastics had taught them the art of coining, v. Mr. Turner's Hist. of A.-S. vol. ii. p. 474: Monetæ Anglo-Saxonice species:—1. Sceat min pretium meum, Ps. 61, 4: Chr. 1085. Some derive this word from the Jewish or Heb. שקל sql, skel to weigh: Lat. Mid. siclus: Fr. sicle the fourth part of an ounce, and observe that payments were originally made by weight, as they are still in some countries. Junius refers shilling to the old skella to sound. He pretends that all thicker coins were called shilling in opposition to the coin made of thin plated metal, or bracteates, which had no sound. Wach. thinks that the Moes. skula reus, the A.-S. scyldig is the root of shilling, originally used for a fine. Other etymologists derive this word from the Ger. schild shield, and thus shilling, or rather shildling, would signify a coin stamped with the arms of the prince, or any other person who has the right or privilege of coinage. Frisch derives shilling from the Lat. solidus. Ihre, whose views Adelung most approves, thinks that the original signification of shilling is the Ger. scheide münge small money, Swed. skilje mynt, Dan. skille mynt. This opinion is confirmed by the circumstance that the oldest larger coins were marked by a deep stamped or impressed cross, in such a manner that they could be easily broken into two, three, or four pieces; the different value of shillings is thus easily explained.—scy-lan to divide, or sceale a balance, scale] 1. A SHILLING, a piece or quantity of uncoined silver, which, when coined, would make five of the larger pennies [v. peneg] each of which was about 2½ pence, and twelve of the smaller, each of which was about the value of our present penny; numisma. 2. It is generally found in composition, even in the most ancient writings. In A.-S. astepte is met with. About the derivation etymologists differ very much. Frisch. refers it to the Bohm. stipeni ingraft-

ing; stipiti to plant; and, according to him, stief signifies a person giving assistance to another. The Zittavian chronicles call churchwardens stiefväter step-fathers; and the bridemaids stiefschwestern der braut step-sisters of the bride, which favours the opinion of Frisch. Adelung thinks that stief signifies something not genuine, in opposition to the genuine and true; but he confesses that, from the great antiquity of this word, its derivation is very difficult. Junius, with whom Ihre agrees, refers this word in the most reasonable manner to the A.-S. steopan; and the Old Ger. stiufan or bare; to which the Icel. styfa amputare, privare; may perhaps be added.—A.-S. cild a child] A STEP-CHILD, an orphan; orbatus parente, orphanus, pupillus, Ex. 22, 22: Deut. 10, 18.

It is hardly probable that these expressions can be considered to be taken from the Lat. templum, but rather that the Ger. tempel a high heap, may be applied to a high building, and afterwards to a high building destined for worship. Professor E. Jäkel, in his German Origin of the Latin Language, p. 57, is of this opinion] A TEMPLE; templum:—When the A.-S. settled in Britain, they had idols, altars, temples, and priests. “The Old North. til ad; Dan.
til; Swed. till, a separable particle, is peculiar to the northern dialects; for it is not identical with the Goth. du, the Old high Ger. zi, zuo, the A.-S.
to, &c. Til always governs the
g. case, while du and zi in gene-

TYN, ten, tin [Plat. tien; in Hanover, tein: Dut. tien: Frs. tian: Ger. zehen, zehn: Old Ger. zehun, zehan, zin, cin: Moes. taihun; and in compound words, taihund, te-hund ten: Dan. ti: Swed. tie, tio: Icel. tiu. Jäkel, in his German Origin of the Lat. says, p. 98, The origin of Ger. zehen, Lat. decem, is the best explained by the Old Ger. and Moes. tai hund or hend; that is the old article thai the; and hand, hend hands, both the hands or ten fingers, by which they numbered or counted, as children still do. Thus originated our decimal system. The Roman numerals seem to allude to this origin. V represents one hand expanded; X represents both the hands. From taihend, the Ger. formed ten by contraction, which afterwards, by their predilection for hissing sounds, was changed in zehend, zehen ten. In Lat. the deep guttural h, changed into c or k, and thus formed decem. All the other numbers can be explained in the same manner, if we consider that the old c was properly the Grk. γ, and thus easily changed into g. It is for this reason that we sometimes find vicesimus and vigesimus. Thus the Lat. vi-ginti: Teutonic, twig-ti-gunds or honds two times the hands, twenty. In some old inscriptions viginti is written biginti; in Teutonic twins-ti-gund twenty. Trigint-a, Teutonic trins-ti-gon disthree times the hands, thirty, &c. Centum, cent. in Teutonic, taihend, tehund ten times the hands, or $10 \times 10 = 100$. By the quick pronunciation of this long word, the first syllable was easily passed over, and the last contracted; thus by adding r, the Ger. hundert, Eng. hundred, were formed.—Tooke gives the following derivation.—*ty*n included, concluded, from *ty*nan to enclose, shut in; because with ten numeration is closed, and a new series commences; as, ten and one, ten and two] TEN; decem:—Gif þær beoð *ty*n, Gen. 18, 32. Ðonne byð heofona rice gelic þam *ty*n fæmnum, Mt. 25, 1. He leofode an hund wintra and *ty*n gear ille vixit centum annos et decem annos, Gen. 50, 22. Nigon hund wintra

^vUSA, wusa, an. [In peopling a country, the new comers often take the appellatives of the old inhabitants for proper names.
 It is thus with the names of rivers; hence it is that the Britons, at their first coming, denominated so many rivers in England, Asc, Esc, Isc, Osc,
and Usc, which the English
altered into Ax, Ex, Ox, Ux, Ouse, in Axley, Axholm, Ex-
mouth, Exeter, Uxbridge.
 This is the varied orthography
of the same word which among the Old Britons signified water,
as it does now in the Highlands
and in Ireland, Baxter's Gloss.

^fWER, were, wera, es; m. [Frs. weregeld n: Ger. wehrgeld n: Old Ger. wer, were] A fine for slaying a man, the price or value of a man's life;

capitis æstimatio sive pretium quo vita cujusque apud

Anglo-Saxones pro vario suo statu, ordine, et conditione censebatur. Every man was valued at a certain sum, which was called his were, and whoever took his life was punished by having to pay this were to the family or relations of the deceased. The were was therefore the penalty by which his safety was guarded and his crimes prevented or punished. If he violated certain laws, it was his legal mulct; if he were himself attacked, it was the penalty inflicted on others. Hence it became the measure and mark of a man's personal rank and consequence, because its amount was exactly regulated by his condition in life:—Gif his wer bið twelf hund scil if his were be 1200 shillings, L. In. 19. Gif his were bið, &c. if his were be, &c., L. In. 32. Gilde þone wer, butan wite

The were was the fine a murderer had to pay to the family or relatives of the deceased, and the wite was the fine paid to the magistrate who presided over the district where the murder was perpetrated. Thus the wite was the satisfaction to be rendered to the commu-

° In expressing the sounds of th, the Anglo-Saxon orthography was more consistent than the present English. We now use th to represent two sounds, as heard in the words thing and smooth; the Anglo-Saxons, with greater propriety, used two distinct characters to denote these two separate sounds. The hard or sharp sound of th heard in thing is represented in Anglo-Saxon by þ, þ th; and the soft or flat sound, as found in other, brother, is denoted by ð, ð dth. þ or þ th, representing the hard or sharp sound, is used in Anglo-Saxon at the beginning of words and syllables; as, þing thing, beþencan to bethink. ð or ð dth, denoting the soft or flat sound, is employed at the end of words and syllables; as, sóð sooth, bróðer brother. This is the plan adopted in the present work. As the scribes of the more recent Anglo-Saxon MSS. have not been very precise in the use of þ th, ð dth, it will be desirable to show the reasons by which the sounds and the use of these characters have been determined.

It is evident that þ th is the hard, and ð dth the soft sound; 1st, Because as ð is clearly taken from D, it is most probable that ð represented the sound which comes nearest to D: it is also evident, on the other hand, that þ, as well as the Icelandic þ are taken from the Runic þ, and, therefore, it probably denoted the same hard sound. 2ndly, Because ð dth is found so frequently at the end of a syllable, and between two vowels, where the softer sound is still retained in English, and where, according to the old orthography, ð dth is found in Icelandic and in Ger. and Dan. a mere d; as, sóð, Eng. sooth, and Icel. saðr; oðre, Eng. others, Icel. aðrir: A.-S. bróðer: Eng. brother: Ger. bruder: Dan. broder.

On the contrary, þ is found most at the beginning of words, where the Icel. has always the hard sound; as, þeod people: Icel. þjóð; þencan to think: Icel. þenkja. þ, þ. Hanc literam proprie reor pronuntiandam ut Græcorum θ in Θεος, et Anglorum th in thing; ð, ð, vero ut Angl. th in smooth, &c. Sed confunduntur hi characteres a scriptoribus.

Anglo-Saxon words ending in -ð, -uð [Eng. th: Ger. Dan. Swed. -d, -t: Icel. -ð] are all of the feminine gender; as, myrð mirth; treowð troth, a covenant; yrmð, misery; geoguð youth; gesyhð sight, &c. time, called a knight, who attended the king's Thane or Baron. The rank of a Thane, as well as the other titles of dignity among the A.-S., was not inherited, but was personal, hence it was attainable by all, even by the servile; but, before any one could be elevated to the dignity of an inferior Thane, he must be in possession of five hides of his own land, a church, a kitchen, a bell-house, a judicial seat at the burgh gate, and a seat in the witenagemot. Whoever by his industry and talent obtained these, became a Thane by right, L. Const. Ethel. W. p. 112, 3, 4, 5, 6. POR, Þur, es; q. m. [Mr. Turner remarks, Hist. A.-S. vol. I. p. 213 "as Thor (tor) means a mountain, his name may have some connexion with the ancient eastern custom of worshipping on mountains or hills. He was called the god of thunder, hence his name Thuner. The word seems to imply the mountain deity;" but it may be from Heb. תר tr, thr, thor to go round, circulate; hence Thor who presided over the heavens in circulation. Lye says, Vox Celtica dewr erat fortis, ferox, audax; unde forsan: Grk. θοῦπιος, θοῦπος, bellicosus, strenuus, impetuosus, temerarius; et A.-S. proinde Þor eadem etiam significans, cui necnon affinis plane nostra, dare. Inde autem nomina propria Thorismund, fortis manibus, &c. Habuerunt etiam Cimbri et Islandi suam Thor, vel Tor, audax, audacia; quæ etiam in compositis difficultatem, arduitatem, molestiam denotavit; ista scilicet quæ non nisi Thori vel strenui alicujus, Herculeo quidem labore, superanda essent. Gl. Thor, Hickes's Gr. Icel. p. 71 m, 2*] THOR, one of the principal idols of the Saxons, Germans, &c. He was the same as the Roman Jupiter. Thor, being the most powerful of the gods, was set in the midst, and higher than the rest; formed like a naked man, holding in his right hand a sceptre, and in his left seven stars or planets. He presided in the air; caused thunder, winds, showers, fair weather, &c. On the fifth day of the week sacrifices were offered to Thor, that he might protect the people from thunder and storms. Hence Þors-dæg Thursday; Saxonum et aliorum veterum Septentrionalium Jupiter sive Hercules; numen scilicet in aëre præsidens, cui, peste vel fame imminente, sacrificiis humanis supplicabatur. þrymsa, moneta argentea apud Anglo-Saxones recepta; scilicet Orientales, Occidentales, et Australes; raro etenim aut nunquam apud Mercios in usu fuit. Valebat autem tres denarios. Quum enim Thani capitis æstimatio erat 2000 Thrymsarum, (L. Lund. W. p. 71, § 11) apud Mercios autem 1200 solidorum (W. p. 72). Patet 2000 Thrymsas æquales fuisse 1200 solidis, et proinde æqualem fuisse unam Thrymsam tribus quintis partibus solidi: valebat autem tunc temporis solidus ipse quinque denarios. Denique quum 266 Thrymsæ æquales erant 200 solidis (L. Lund. W. p. 71, § 12) erat una thrymsa æqualis tribus quartis partibus ipsius solidi quam proxime. In an old Fragment on Charlemagne, it is used actively; einen troren to mourn; the A.-S. dryrmian to make sad; the Moes. drobnan turbare; drobjan turbare; draiban vexare, affligere, are all related to this word. The Ger. trauren is an intensivum, formed by the final syllable ern, from the old trauren, thruuuen, which Tat. and the old Suanbian poets often use, and which are formed from Ot. riuuan to cry, lament, to howl, by prefixing t. Adelung, in Ger. trüben to trouble, &c. observes that the etymology of this verb is often mistaken. He properly distinguishes the Old Ger. v. a. druban, truoben, the modern trüben, turbare, (which like triben to drive, signify to plague; the Moes. draiban the A.-S. drefan, the Lat. turbare) from the old v. n. thruuen to be driven, vexed, plagued, the A.-S. þrowian, and from which, the Ger. trauren to mourn, is the intensivum] To suffer, endure; pati, luere pœnas, agonizare:—Þæt we sceolun susel þrowian that we must torment endure, Cd. 213: 222. SUPPLEMENT,

CONTAINING CORRECTIONS AND ADDITIONS.

MANY of the words in the Supplement are from Som. Ben. Lye, and Mann., the orthography and meaning of which are given solely on their authority. Such words were previously omitted, as a reference sanctioning their use could not be discovered. They are now inserted, with the view of supplying every assistance, as they may possibly have been found in this form by these Lexicographers, though it must be confessed that some of them appear to be only infinitives and nominatives improperly formed from other words. The inflection and meaning of all other words are confirmed by precise references.

In addition to the list at the end of the Preface, the following contractions and marks claim especial attention in the Supplement.

-dl denotes that the preceding word or words, from the commencement of the article, or paragraph, or from -, are to be erased.

dl- that the following word or words, to the conclusion of the article, or to -, are to be erased.

* that the word or words immediately following are corrections, and that, therefore, the printed work must be corrected to accord with what follows the asterisk.

l. with a numeral following, denotes the line from the commencement of the article or paragraph.

Thus: p. x. l. 18, Getæ or -dl. denotes that in page x. line 18, the words Getæ or are to be erased. Æddra, ædra -dl. * Æddre, ædre, an; f. a vein, drain, etc. shews that Æddra, ædra, found in the alphabetical order, are to be erased, and the words following the asterisk are to be substituted in the Dictionary. Ab * the woof, denotes that the woof must be substituted in the Dictionary for the erroneous explanation a beam. Æfen-tíd, l. 4, Seo * æfen-tid, shews that in the 4th line of this article, the quotation must be Seo æfen-tid þæs, etc. and not Seo æfen-tide. Æ'ra, l. 4 * Former, denotes that in the 4th line of the article Æra, Formerly must be altered to Former.

p. x. l. 38, Getæ or -dl.
p. xiv. l. 4, the chief * writings in which are a translation of Isidore, and of Willeram's Canticum canticorum, v. p. cxxiii. 6, l. 4.
p. xvi. l. 15, to leave * Anglen.

Professor Leo of Halle has published the following Anglo-Saxon and Old-Saxon Reading-book, with an Anglo-Saxon and German Vocabulary, arranged according to the vowel system of Professor J. Grimm: Altsächsische und Angelsächsische Sprachproben, herausgegeben und mit einem erklärenden Verzeichniss der angelsächsischen Wörter versehen von Heinrich Leo, Halle, 1838; 8vo. pp. 274.

THE END.

THE HISTORY OF THE ALPHABET

CAMBRIDGE:

PRINTED BY METCALFE AND PALMER,
TRINITY STREET.

NOTES ON THE ALPHABETS.

1. The German character is still generally used in Holland for printing the Scriptures, and books for the lower orders.

2. Sounded like k, before a, o, u; like ch before consonants, and at the end of syllables; but like ts, or z before e, i.

3. F has the precise sound of the Eng. f; and though v is said to be softer, it is generally pronounced in Ger. and Dut. as f; thus, vast fast, vinger a finger, vin a fin, &c.

4. Instead of curling the lips, as when enunciating the Eng. w, or oo, let them remain in a horizontal or natural position, and then try to pronounce water nearly like vater, and you have the exact sound of the Ger. and Dut. w, as well as the Dan v.

5. The Dut. c has the sound of k before a, o, u; and of s before e, i, y, just as in Eng.

6. In Dut. d has the sound of t at the end of words: in Dan. when d concludes a word, stands between two vowels, or is doubled, it has a softer sound, like dh in A.-S. and Icel. ð, or Eng. the in soothe; as, lad, fader, and vædde, pronounced lathe, father, vaiththe. After l, n, r, the d is scarcely perceptible in the common pronunciation, except as a peculiar emphasis on the preceding vowel. The Dan. g in similar cases has a soft sound like j or y.

7. H in Dut. is as aspirate as in Eng.: g is a strong guttural, and has the same sound as ch in the Scotch loch a lake, och alas, O; as, och mon O man! A very strong aspiration of h approaches to the sound of the Dut. g. The Dut. ch has a little softer sound than the g.

8. By commencing with the sound of e, and without changing the organs, closing the lips with u, you have the precise sound of the Fr. Ger. and Dut. u.

9. A very sharp sound, like tz.

10. This is a peculiar sound; Géétah is only an approximation to the real pronunciation of the name of Göthe, the famous poet. Though the Dan. ö, and o with a slanting stroke through it from right to left, have the sound of the Fr. eu in peu, and eu in veuve; they are both represented in the Dictionary by ö, for want of proper type.

11. Ch. hard, as in chyle.

12. Γ, γ, always hard, as g in give; but γ before γ, κ, ξ and χ and the Moes. g before g have the sound of n in angle, as ἀγγελος an angel, and λυγξ a lynx, are pronounced an'-ge-los and lunx.

13. In the Russian alphabet the following letters are very peculiar and difficult to pronounce, sch, ts, yer, yu, ya.

14. The Persians use the Arabic alphabet with the addition of پ pe, چ che, گ ghaf, and ز zhe.

15. In Sanscrit, the Grammar of Sir Charles Wilkins, and the invaluable Dictionary of Sir Graves C. Haughton have been generally followed. The oriental arrangement of the alphabet is this.

	Surd ^s .		Sonants.
Gutturals	kā ¹	khă	gă	ghă ngă
Palatals	chă	chhă	jă	jhă ngă or nya
Cerebrals	tă ²	t'hă	dă	dhă nă ³
Dentals	tă	t'hă	dă	dhă nă
Labials	pă	p'hă	bă	bhă mă
Semivowels	yă	ră	lă	vă
Sibilants	să	shă	să	hă ll ³

¹ ā is never written but at the beginning of words, being always included in every consonant. The other vowels, and the diphthongs are written.

² Formed by doubling the tongue far back on the palate, so as to produce a hollow sound. Bopp calls them linguals.

³ Only used in the Vedas, and is said to resemble the surd, or Welsh ll.
